

Millennial Caregiving for an Aging California

A Conversation on the caregiving crisis, joined by Congressman Eric Swalwell

How will we manage the care and support of our parents, grandparents, aunts and uncles?

How will we manage the care of our friends and neighbors who don't have children?

As California's population ages, the number of people needing long-term care will soar. Many will end up in nursing homes, with high costs.

The "graying of America" is creating a caregiving crisis that poses both threats to and opportunities for young adults. There is a critical need for investment in California's eldercare workforce and family caregivers at both the federal and state level.

Join the Alzheimer's Association, American Medical Students Association CSU East Bay Chapter, and U.S. Congressman Eric Swalwell for a conversation about the caregiving crisis and how young adults are poised to be a part of the solution.
